Course Description:
This course asks the question, “What is the church?” in dialogue with Christian theological figures and schools representing Roman Catholic, Protestant, and Orthodox Christian traditions as well as diverse voices representing a variety of theological approaches.

Course Outcomes:
- Students will become conversant with a variety of Christian theological traditions and approaches to reflecting critically on the nature and mission of the church.
- Students will be able to articulate their own ecclesiology and that of their own traditions while bringing ecclesiology to bear on the contemporary situation and particular problems of Christian practice in church and society.

Method:
This course will be taught primarily in a seminar format centered around a discussion of key readings.

Reading Response Papers
Twice during the semester each student will prepare a 7-8 page response paper on the assigned reading material. This paper should be divided into two equal parts and should (1) briefly summarize what the student understands the author to be saying followed by (2) a critical response and evaluation of what the student understands the author to be saying. The paper should be typed, double-spaced, using a standard 12-pt. font. If the student is the designated reader for that afternoon, enough photocopies should be brought to class so that the professor and each student can have their own copy.

The summary of the reading should not attempt to move page by page, chapter by chapter, but should instead summarize what you understand the author to be saying and how you understand the author to be developing his or her thesis.

The critical response and evaluation of the reading is not a list of questions you have about the reading nor is it more summary, only now in a different form. It is instead an argument or arguments (not merely a claim or a set of claims) for what is helpful, provocative, useful, disturbing, difficult, incomplete, or faulty in the reading. A response and evaluation such as this is not a statement such as “I liked this...” or “I didn’t like that...” (in fact, avoiding the first person altogether can help you better write this section) but rather a thoughtful, reasoned set of judgments about what the author has said. The evaluation need not be negative, but it must be argued.

Students should be very careful to maintain an equal balance between the two required parts of the paper and to stay within the required page length parameters. At the beginning of the class, the student will read the paper followed by a discussion of the paper and the reading material.

Participation

On each of the days you are not preparing a reading response paper and as a way of promoting a lively, meaningful discussion of the reading, you should bring to class your own responses to the reading in the form of bullet points with questions and observations. This is not meant to be a string of quotations that you found important or striking, but examples of your own critical engagement with the reading. What do you want to say about the reading or what questions do you have? The instructor will call on students periodically to provide input from these prepared comments and questions.

Term Project

You are asked to write an 18-20 page research paper in which, first, you conduct an ecclesiologica\textsuperscript{1} analysis of a contemporary issue, problem, or practice in the church or society. The paper begins by unpacking that issue, problem, or practice as one that is ecclesiological (think back to Cavanaugh’s examination of “torture” as an ecclesiological problem in \textit{Torture and Eucharist}). The question here is how this issue, problem, or practice, bears upon how we are to understand or re-think the nature and mission of the church (or vice-versa). The second section of the paper then moves into a more systematic ecclesiological reflection in dialogue with the issue, problem, or practice raised in the first section and in dialogue with whatever thinkers or resources the student argues are helpful. The third section is more strategic or prescriptive, and builds upon the ecclesiological

\textsuperscript{1} Please note the following distinction between commonly confused terms:

- \textit{Ecclesiastical}: “of or relating to the church as an established institution” [Merriam-Webster] (e.g., “our church follows an ecclesiastical calendar.”)
- \textit{Ecclesial}: “of or relating to the church or to the church’s nature” (e.g., “Christian existence is ecclesial existence.”)
- \textit{Ecclesiological}: “of or relating to the understanding, doctrine, or concept of the church” (e.g. “Church architecture has enormous ecclesiological significance”)} work of the paper in order to make recommendations about future Christian practice. All three sections should be roughly the same length.

Class Participation

If, in the professor’s opinion, the student is missing too many class sessions or is not actively participating, this will affect the student’s final grade —sometimes seriously. Class participation is a key to meeting the course objectives. Please consult with the professor ahead of time if you believe you will have difficulties in this area.

Inclusive Language

The instructor will conscientiously attempt and all students are urged to use inclusive language, images, and metaphors in both their speaking and writing.

Students with Disabilities

Any students who believe they have a disability should meet with BU Disability Services as soon as possible at the beginning of the semester to initiate disability verification and discuss accommodations that may be necessary to ensure your successful completion of course requirements. That office is at 19 Deerfield Street and can be contacted at 617-353-3658. Request for accommodations are then sent by that office to the Academic Dean who forwards them to the Instructor.

Academic Conduct

The STH Academic Code of Conduct may be found on the STH website at: www.bu.edu/sth/academic/academic-conduct. All students are required to familiarize themselves with this code, its definitions of misconduct, and its sanctions. Students should especially familiarize themselves with the section on plagiarism.

Late Policy

Work will not be accepted late.
