Biblical Concepts and Our World
Looking for Jesus and Finding Christ
The search for a true understanding of the church’s early beginnings is a key aspect of the question of whether or not Jesus was the founder of the church. There are many theories and interpretations of the role of Jesus in the development of the church, and the exact nature of his relationship with his followers is still a topic of debate among scholars.

Some historians argue that Jesus was a significant figure in the early Christian movement, and that his teachings and ministry played a crucial role in the development of the church. Others believe that the church was established by the apostles and other early Christian leaders, and that Jesus’ role was more peripheral to its development.

Regardless of one’s perspective, the study of the history of the church is an important aspect of understanding the development of Christian thought and practice. By examining the various theories and interpretations of the role of Jesus in the church, we can gain a deeper understanding of the foundation of this institution.

Beyond the simplistic vision of Jesus as the sole founder of the church, there is a rich and complex history of the development of the Christian community. The early church faced many challenges, including persecution, division, and the need to adapt to changing cultural and political conditions. Despite these challenges, the church continued to grow and thrive, and its impact on the world has been significant.

This interplay between the church and its environment is a key aspect of its history, and has continued to shape its development until the present day. By exploring the history of the church in its various contexts, we can gain a deeper understanding of its role in the world and its potential for the future.

the nature of the covenant in the New Testament.

The New Testament presents a different view of the covenant than the Old Testament. It is based on the promises given to Abraham and his seed, which are realized in the person of Jesus Christ. The covenant is not just a legal agreement but a personal relationship between God and his people. It is a partnership in which God is the active agent, working to fulfill his promises. The New Testament covenant is not just a promise but a reality that is being fulfilled in the lives of those who believe.
