1 Exit Poll Descriptive Statistics

On metrics that allow for a comparison, the exit poll sample appears to be fairly representative of Boston-area Brazilians who voted in the 2022 election. Brazil's electoral authority, the Tribunal Superior Eleitoral (TSE), publishes precinct-level information on registered voters' gender, age, and education. All precincts are not equally likely to turn out, especially outside of Brazil, so the best comparative metric is an average of precinct-level figures, weighted by each precinct's share of votes cast. Table 1 shows that the sample was highly representative of these weighted precinct averages on gender, and quite good on age, albeit oversampling younger voters and undersampling older ones by a few percentage points. The sample appears much less representative in terms of education, but this is a lagging indicator; the TSE only records voters' education levels when they register to vote, so any additional education completed in the United States would not be reflected in these data unless they reregistered, typically after moving to a new consular jurisdiction.<sup>1</sup> By design, the sample nearly perfectly matched the distribution of votes across the two polling places. Finally, the exit poll underestimated vote for Bolsonaro by about 6 percentage points in each round, but most surveys in Brazil did so as well, a phenomenon that is increasingly common in elections with populist or anti-establishment candidates.

Table 2 presents additional descriptive statistics on the sample, beyond those variables that can be compared to the Boston-area Brazilian electorate. Consistent with other data on Brazilians in the United States, a majority of respondents were white and originated from states in Brazil's South or Southeast regions. The most common cities of residence were Boston and several of its most heavily Brazilian suburbs, but respondents were generally quite spread out around the state, with a few traveling from neighboring states as well. The sample had a much smaller share of recent arrivals to the United States than in Marcelli et al.'s (2009) household survey of Bostonarea Brazilians, suggesting (perhaps paradoxically) that longer-term residents of the U.S. may be more likely to register and to vote in Brazilian elections. Reported interest in both Brazilian and American politics was quite high, which almost certainly influences registration and voting. Household income, which was higher than anticipated, likely influences this decision as well, especially since most voters had to travel some distance to the polling place. The distribution of religion and church attendance in the sample are discussed in the main text.

2 Focus Group Recruitment

As discussed in the main text, focus group participants were recruited from among the exit poll respondents. Respondents had the opportunity to opt into the focus group-eligible sample by leaving their contact information on a tear-off sheet at the bottom of the self-administered paper questionnaire. After each round of the survey, including the pre-test at the September festival, we invited respondents who were 30–70 years old and were churchgoing, Bolsonaro-supporting Christians to participate in a focus group on an upcoming weekend. As is typical with focus group recruitment, those who attended were a small share of those that we invited. There are thus two stages of respondent self-selection involved in focus group recruitment: leaving one's contact information, and attending after having been invited.

Evidence suggests that self-selecting into the focus group-eligible sample and attending after having been invited do not introduce major biases. Table 3 contains descriptive statistics on the three focus groups. For two of the three survey rounds, those who left their contact information have significantly higher levels of interest in Brazilian politics than those who did not. However, the difference is substantively small, about a third of a standard deviation of the interest variable in each case. Moreover, survey respondents as a whole were already highly interested in Brazilian politics—an average of 3.5 on a 1–4 scale—which is unsurprising since most were interviewed after having voted in a home-country election from the United States. Other differences—participants in the first focus group were somewhat older; those who left their contact information for the second lived somewhat closer and were more likely to be male—showed up only in one of the three groups.

Table 4 presents results from logistic regressions of the decision to leave contact information and to attend the focus group once invited, pooling data from all three rounds of the survey (with fixed effects for each round). Non-Christians (with Catholics as the baseline category), men, and those with more interest in Brazilian politics were more likely to opt into the focus group-eligible sample by leaving their contact information. Among those invited to the focus group, the only significant predictor of showing up was church attendance—a variable that correlates with Catholic versus evangelical, which may explain why it is only significant after controlling for religion. While I avoided Sunday mornings for the focus groups, some churches hold worship services at other times, and frequent churchgoers are also likely to have other church-related commitments on the weekends.

3 Focus Group Protocol

Below is the text containing the introductory comments and discussion questions posed by the focus group moderator. There were 11 questions in each focus group, with some differences across groups, as noted below.

Welcome to our discussion group and thank you being here! This discussion group is part of a research project that is seeking to understand the experiences and opinions of the Brazilian community in Boston, including your experiences and opinions about religion and politics. My name is [REDACTED], I graduated from [REDACTED] two years ago, and I wrote my honors thesis about this topic because I wanted to get to know my community in Boston better. This is Professor [REDACTED], who is organizing this research project and was my advisor for the thesis. [[REDACTED] will introduce [REDACTED].]<sup>2</sup>

We know that [Saturday/Sunday] is usually a day to spend with friends and family, so we are very grateful for your presence here and your decision to spend time with us. We want to have a friendly, casual conversation here, like if you were getting together with your friends, eating salgadinhos and talking about life. There are no right or wrong answers here, and all opinions are valuable. We know that sometimes people argue about religion or politics, but we also know from the questionnaires that you filled out [two weeks ago/on election day] that you have some attitudes in common. So we think it should be an easy conversation.

Before we start, I'd like to ask that everyone take a look at this consent form and let me know if you agree to have our conversation audio recorded. We will only use first names during our conversation, and we will always use pseudonyms to cite your comments outside of this group. [Distribute consent forms and verify each person's response about recording.]

- Let's start with introductions. Let's go around the table, and I would like each person to tell me what part of Brazil you are from, how long you have lived here in the United States, where you live now, what you do for work, and what you do for fun? I'll start with myself...
- How do you stay informed about what's happening in Brazil? For example, maybe you watch TV Globo, or you have a WhatsApp group with friends in Brazil, or you FaceTime with relatives who still live in Brazil.
- [Focus groups 1–2] As you know, Brazil [will have presidential elections next month, with the first round next Sunday/had presidential elections two weeks ago and is going to have the second round of those elections on October 30]. Imagine that you were to create a new candidate who would be the perfect candidate in those elections. What would that ideal candidate be like?
- [Focus group 1] What are some things you've heard about the Brazilian election or electoral campaign, and where have you heard them from?
- [Focus groups 2–3] What [are you doing/did you do] to follow the electoral campaign? For example, did you watch the debaters before the first round? Or did you see the candidates' campaign advertising on TV?
- [Focus groups 1–2] Sometimes when our lives change, our opinions about politics change as well. Have your opinions about Brazilian politics changed over the time that you have been living in the U.S.?
- [Focus group 3] After the second round of the elections, there were protests of the results throughout Brazil, and also here in Boston. We are going to show a video of a protest in Harvard square on Sunday, November 6 [show video].<sup>3</sup> Did you hear about those protests in Cambridge? Did anyone attend?

- [Focus group 3] Some people participating in the protests here and in Brazil are calling for military intervention to prevent Lula from taking office. What is your opinion about these calls for military intervention?
- I'd like to change topics now and learn more about your religious life. What type of church do you go to here, and how often? How did you start attending that church? Did you go to a similar type of church in Brazil?
- During mass or worship, a priest or pastor talks mostly about the Word of God. Sometimes, talking about the Word of God, social or political issues come up, including issues about the elections. Does this happen in your church? Can you give an example?
- After mass or worship, people often get together to have coffee, eat snacks, and talk. Or maybe the church organizes other social events like a barbecue. When you get together with other people from your church, how often do you talk about politics?
- [Focus group 1] We have mostly talked about Brazilian politics. But there are also going to be elections here in the United States, in November. What are some things you've heard about the American election or the electoral campaign here, and where have you heard them from?
- [Focus group 2] We have mostly talked about Brazilian politics. But there are also going to be elections here in the United States, in November. Which party would you want to have a majority in the U.S. Congress after those elections, and why?
- [Focus group 3] We have mostly talked about Brazilian politics, but there were also recent elections here in the United States. The Republican party is going to have a majority in the House of Representatives and the Democratic Party is going to maintain control of the Senate. Where you happy with that result or would you prefer that it were different?

- [Focus group 1] The next U.S. presidential elections will be in 2024. Imagine that you were to create a new candidate who would be the perfect candidate in those elections. What would that perfect candidate be like?
- [Focus group 2] There will also be elections for Governor of Massachusetts, where the contest is between Maura Healey and Geoff Diehl. Who would you like to be elected governor of Massachusetts, and why?
- [Focus group 3] There were also elections for Governor of Massachusetts, where the Democrat, Maura Healey, defeated the Republican, Geoff Diehl. What is your opinion about the result of that election?
- Is there anything else we haven't talked about yet that you'd like to share with us?

4 Regression Results

In the main text, I report regression results graphically. Regression coefficients and standard errors are reported in Table 5.

5 Analysis of Livestreamed Worship Services

Table 6 lists the Brazilian churches in Boston whose worship services were analyzed for this study. As discussed in the main text, I downloaded and analyzed videos of these churches' weekly worship services over a three-month period. For churches with multiple weekly worship services, I chose the first Sunday morning service each week, which was generally the service with the most Facebook or YouTube views. I used Trint's video transcription service to generate transcripts for analysis. Based on testing, Trint provided the most accurate Portuguese-language transcripts among various alternatives. The quality of the transcript varied according to the audio quality of the service itself, and it was generally higher for the evangelical churches, which place more emphasis on modern video and audio production during worship. Singing and collective speech (e.g., the congregation reciting the Lord's Prayer during a Catholic service) generally transcribed poorly, but sermons, clergy-led prayer, announcements, and other speech by the priest, pastor, or a congregation member speaking into a microphone mostly transcribed well. These are the components of the worship service where political content is most likely to appear, since they are less scripted.

 Table 6: Boston-Area Brazilian Churches Analyzed

Note: Followers gives the number of followers of the church's Facebook page as of July 2022.

For the text analysis of the livestreamed worship services, I read the transcripts into R and used the kwic function in the quanteda package to do word counts on the following phrases:

- Blessing: benç*
- Hallelujah: aleluia, hallelujah
- Vote: ^vota*
- Election: eleiç*
- Candidate: candidat*

I manually inspected all hits to verify that the search terms were not picking up false positives; if so, I modified them accordingly. For example, the search term for Vote includes "votar" (to vote) and "votação" (voting) but screens out "devotar" (to devote), as well as "voto," which is the noun form of "vote" in Portuguese but also means a religious vow and was only ever used in this non-political sense. For the religious terms, I chose ones that commonly appear in both Catholic and evangelical worship.

6 Survey Questionnaires

Survey questionnaires in both English and Portuguese can be found on the following pages. All questionnaires were administered in Portuguese; English versions were available in case anyone requested one, but no one did. The first set of questionnaires, asking about intended vote in the upcoming election, correspond to the pre-test at the 2022 Brazilian Independence Day Festival in Boston in September. These data are not used in the analysis reported in the main text, though I do analyze focus groups recruited via this survey. The next two sets of questionnaires correspond to the election day exit polls. For anonymous peer review, the consent form at the top of each questionnaire is redacted, since it identifies the author and the author's institution.
