Preaching Theological Challenges

Wesley J. Wildman — Boston University — Spring 2010 — STH TC856/TT856

Course Description

This course is both a preaching course and a theology course. The aim is to improve expertise in the preaching art as it is applied to theologically challenging subject matter. Participants will develop homiletical skills that apply to almost any sermon, and also study tough questions in theology that complicate the act of preaching. The course’s operative premises are three: (1) no amount of homiletical skill can compensate for poorly thought-out theology, (2) homiletical excellence greatly assists in communicating complex theological ideas, and (3) intellectually compelling theology places special demands on the preaching task. The class will access theologically challenging questions through great literature, on the one hand, and through popular religious books written for children, teenagers, and adults, on the other hand. Two textbooks will guide the class throughout the semester, one in homiletics (Haddon) and one in theology (Cobb).

The class is intended for masters students who plan to make preaching or public speaking on religious topics part of their professional profile. Classes will meet once a week on Thursdays from 2:00 to 5:00. The format of classes will vary from seminar-style discussion of class material to sermon workshops where students preach to one another. The course counts (1) as an MTS Core Concentration course for Theology and for Area B, and also for Homiletics and for Area D; (2) as an MDiv Theology 3 Core Elective, and (3) as an MDiv Preaching course.

The main product of the course will be a project combining (1) a research paper on a theologically challenging theme, (2) a matched pair of sermons on the selected theme, and (3) an analysis of the two sermons from both homiletical and theological perspectives. This project’s topic must be approved in advance by the instructor. The project will earn 50% of the course grade (2,000-word research paper, two twenty-minute sermons, and a 1,500-word homiletical and theological analysis of the sermons). One of the sermons will be preached in class, and evaluated for both content and delivery (20%). There will also be several class presentations on assigned reading material (10%). The remainder of the grade (20%) will be based on the quality of seminar participation, including attendance, timeliness, and discussion. incompletes are not allowed—except when they are; paperwork is necessary.
